PCI WINTER SCHOOL 2018

Thinking About Programs

Dates: Dec. 17, 2018 - Dec. 29,2018

PERSISTENT
COMPUTING INSTITUTE
This edition of the PCI schools presents a more systematic approach to languages and structures. It will present contrasts like programming using typeless systems and systems with strong typing, or the contrast between data and control structures. These ideas originate in dealing with paradoxes like Russell's paradox in set theory. The lambda calculus and systems based on it will be our main vehicles of study.

Among the concepts you will learn are: thinking about data structures and code, reasoning about code using strong types, distinctions between data structures and their different implementations, and some ways of how abstract ideas are implemented into practice.

You will need to bring your own laptop with a GNU/Linux like Ubuntu 16 or 18 (LTS). While other flavours of GNU/Linux are ok, we need you to have the standard C development system based on GCC etc., the Racket system 6.x, and the GHC (Glasgow Haskell) system 8.x installed on your GNU/Linux systems.

The sessions will be through out the day from morning 8:30 am till evening 5:00 pm. They will be held at the Persistent Systems Ltd. Hinjewadi office.
